PLANNING OUR FUTURE

North Plains has started the process of reviewing and updating its Comprehensive Plan (Chapter 16 of the Municipal Code) and related codes. In the coming months the City will be inviting residents to make written comments and attend public meetings on proposed changes to the plan including zoning definitions, related zoning maps, and population projections which will determine where and when the community will expand. Additionally the City will need to review its transportation and parks and recreation plans as part of the process.

A vacancy exists on the Planning Commission if you would like to actively work on shaping the City’s future. Please apply at City Hall.

Those were the good old days...
It is Sunday, February 9th and we are snowed in at Mountaintdale -- have been for four days. We have been lucky to have had the electricity on and the water running. With our freezer stocked, a closet full of canned goods, and a full woodshed, we could easily last for a month here without going out.
I have measured the snow at 10 inches here and am told there is much more up in the hills. This is the most snow I have seen here since December 2008, when I shoveled 14 inches of wet snow off our roof.
So, we are snowed in, couldn’t get out if we tried, because the snowplow has blocked our driveway; it is a good time to sit back and work on and article for the next newsletter.
I thought we would take a walk this month, on a nice sunny day, along Main Street, going North across the railroad tracks. Around a hundred years ago, North Plains’ first saloon was here. This is the same location that All Terrain Body and Paint occupies today.
The building I remember being there was

Stigum’s Utility Trailer Company
Tom Stigum’s machine shop in the 1930’s. Stigum specialized in building log truck trailers, he came up with some new innovations, and formed the Utility Trailer Company. My parents sold Stigum the forge and blacksmith equipment from the Stanley Hahn blacksmith shop at Mountaintale before they dismantled it. I was in the building when these logging trailers were being built, and remember the floor being dirt as a protective measure in case of fire.
Directly across Main Street to the West, was a grain warehouse. I have heard the name of Bucchan and Sellers being associated with this operation in the early days. In 1923 the warehouse was being operated by A. K. Reynolds and J. Kennon. By 1940, the business was taken over by Smith and DeFrees. If you had known Clarence DeFrees, you would have heard his favorite joke, “Arti doesn’t like rutabagas because rutabagas make Arti choke!” and he would laugh and laugh! His son, Norman DeFrees, came back from World War II and was involved in the grain business. Farmers could sell grain here, buy seed, and get feed ground for their livestock.

One year, when DeFrees had the warehouse, there was a crop failure across the country of brewing barley. At that time, Oregon grew hundreds of acres of barely, but it was not considered up to the standard for brewing beer. But, this year, the buyers came with cash in hand. The old warehouse was not geared up to handle the volume being moved. The elevator was slow and loaded trucks of grain lined up beside the lower tavern waiting to unload.
The old feed mill burned in 1959, and then the VanDykes got into the grain business here. They built the large metal building and also a grain elevator on the vacant lot across from the street where the saloon and Stigum’s shop had once been. This elevator also burned later on.
When the VanDykes were buying grain, the same problem with unloading the trucks came about. Again, they parked alongside the lower tavern waiting. One night, young vandals opened the rear grain gates on several trucks and let the wheat spill out onto the street. What a mess that was!
On the next block, west side of Main, in later years, lived a North Plains legend; B. S. Brown. He was known as a teller of tall tales. He almost always wore a hard hat. “B.S.” were not his real initials, but you can figure it out.
At the NW Corner of Main and Wasco Street, stood the Woodmen of The World Hall. I remember this weathered old building very well. It had two stories with only a few windows. I believe this building moved here from Glencoe, but haven’t been able to verify this. We do know there was a dance hall in Glencoe where the Woodmen of The World (a fraternal organization) held meetings, earlier. There is a mention of the Catholics of the area using a Woodman of the World hall before the construction of their St. Edward Catholic Church started in 1914.

Now we will cross over to the east side of Main Street. There is a boardwalk there and not so much dust. It is interesting to note the only boardwalk on the North side of town goes to the homes of Julius Schoenberg and the Mays Brothers. The Schoenberg house on the east corner of Main and North Ave was earlier the home of Elmer Mays. It stood next to the dance hall in old Glencoe and was moved to this location. Julius was a partner with the Mays brothers in their bank and store. Their house is still there.
The Mays Brothers, Marion and Elmer, each built new homes on Lenox Street that still stand there today. I still believe these are two of the most attractive and comfortable looking houses in town. I remember being in grade school when several of the local schools in the area had a sing-a-long between those two houses. We all sat on the lawn and there were pianos playing at each house. We sang “You are my Sunshine” and “Home on the Range”.

Construction of the present Church was from 1965-1966.

That is probably enough of a walk for today, the shoes are dirty. It would have been nice to go back to the saloon where we started and have a cool one.

We will be also celebrating with $2.50 pints of Rogue Irish Ale, pints of Guinness, and shots of Irish whiskey. The custom of imbibing alcohol on St. Patrick’s Day comes from an old Irish legend. As the story goes, St. Patrick was served a glass of whiskey that was considerably less than full. He took this as an opportunity to teach a lesson of generosity to the innkeeper. He told the innkeeper that in his cellar resided a monstrous devil who fed on the dishonesty of the innkeeper. In order to banish the devil, the man must change his ways. When St. Patrick returned to the inn some time later, he found the owner generously filling the patron’s glasses to overflowing. He returned to the cellar with the innkeeper and found the devil emaciated from the landlord’s generosity, and promptly banished the demon, proclaiming that everyone should have a drop of the “hard stuff” on his feast day.

“Meet me at the Crick”
New Ordinances Regarding E-Cigarettes

Recently Washington County Tobacco Prevention and Education Program advised City Council about the local trends regarding tobacco and nicotine use. As a result the City Council is considering ordinances to ban the sale of e-cigarettes and other similar products to minors under 18 and ban smoking, including “vaping” at City facilities.

One of the most alarming trends is the use of e-cigarettes among youth. "The increased use of e-cigarettes by teens is deeply troubling," said CDC Director Tom Frieden, M.D., M.P.H. "Nicotine is a highly addictive drug. Many teens who start with e-cigarettes may be condemned to struggling with a lifelong addiction to nicotine and conventional cigarettes." A 2013 survey of Oregon teens suggests that 5.2% of 11th graders now use e-cigarettes. Nationally, almost 10% of middle and high school students are using e-cigarettes according to the Centers for Disease Control. The electronic cigarette was introduced to the U.S. market in 2007 and offers the nicotine-addicted an alternative to smoking tobacco. Most "e-cigs" are similar enough in appearance to be mistaken for regular cigarettes, but one look inside and you'll see the main difference: E-cigarettes don't contain tobacco. Instead, there's a mechanism that heats up liquid nicotine, which turns into a vapor that smokers inhale and exhale. The vapor comes in different concentrations from 0-24 mg of nicotine, and a vapor cartridge equals about a half-pack of cigarettes.

Because they contain no tobacco, e-cigarettes aren't subject to tobacco laws, which means they can be purchased without proof of age, especially online. This raises concerns e-cigs may be particularly appealing to kids and may encourage nicotine addiction among young people. The new ordinances only applies within the City limits of North Plains. Similar ordinances are being adopted by other local agencies.

In Washington County:
50,045 adults regularly smoke cigarettes.
9,748 people suffer from a serious illness caused by tobacco use.
499 people will die from tobacco use
(That’s 18 percent of all deaths in this county).
$91 million is spent on medical care for tobacco-related illnesses for Washington County residents.
